Reforms in Irrigation Sector Sindh

Pakistan Muslim League-Quaid (PML-Q) President and former prime minister Nawaz Sharif has been keeping an eye on the progress of irrigation reforms in Sindh. The party has been pressing for the implementation of the reforms, which were proposed by the former PPP-led government. The reforms include the transfer of land to farmers, the establishment of a water management board, and the reduction of subsidies on irrigation equipment. The PML-Q has been critical of the slow pace of implementation and has called for stronger action to ensure that the reforms are carried out. The party has also been critical of the government's decision to increase the price of electricity, which will have a negative impact on the agriculture sector.

Why forego dialogue for dramatics?

Pakistan Muslim League-Quaid (PML-Q) President and former prime minister Nawaz Sharif has been perceived as trying to influence the political situation in Sindh by pushing for the implementation of reforms. The party has been pressuring the government to take action, and there have been reports of the party's involvement in the recent protests in the province. The PML-Q has been critical of the government's decision to increase the price of electricity, which will have a negative impact on the agriculture sector.
